Abstract

Each type of paper defined in Section 4.1 of the Guidelines for Writing Academic Papers must include an abstract at the beginning. With regard to the structure of an abstract, see Swales and Feak (2009).

Keywords: keyword1; keyword2; keyword3

1 Introduction

Write the introduction of your document.

This is an example of a footnote <sup>1</sup>:

This is an example of boldface text.

This is an example of italicized text.

This is an example of a bullet-list:

- First item
- Second item

This is an example of an ordered list:

1. First element
2. Second element

This is an example of a reference to a different section of the document: Section 2.

You can avoid indentation by using the `\noindent` command

1.1 Subsection of the Introduction

If you want, you can add more depth to your document by using subsections.

1.1.1 Subsubsection of the Subsection of the Introduction

You can also use a subsubsection.

2 Related Work and Research Gap

This is the section describing the related work and outlining the research gap that your document is addressing.

This is an example of a citation with pages provided: (LeCun et al., 2015, pp. 437–438).

This is an example of a citation without pages provided: (Jordan and Mitchell, 2015).

This is an example of an “in-text” citation: Jordan and Mitchell (2015).

Remember to insert each entry to the references.bib file (or to a new Bibtex file—in which case, such file must be specified at the beginning of the document).

3 Research Question

State the main research question tackled by your document.

What is the research question addressed by this document?

Remember to motivate why the question is relevant, as well as the benefits that can be derived by answering such question.

If necessary, you can add “ancillary” research questions.

4 Procedure

Describe the (expected) methodology followed to answer the considered research question described in Section 3.

It is typical for Exposé that the forthcoming research may present some degree of uncertainty. Hence, the research design is not expected to be “set in stone”. Yet it is absolutely essential to start with a clear plan. If some modifications become necessary as your work proceeds, you can update your design in agreement with your supervisor.

(important remark: if you believe your research will have some “risks” or some “ethical issues”, then clearly mention them here and also explain how you plan to address all such problems.)

5 Preliminary Table of Content

Provide an expected Table of Content of the final thesis.

Abstract .....	i
1 Introduction .....	1
2 Second Section .....	tbd
2.1 Subsection1 .....	tbd
2.2 Subsection2 .....	tbd
3 Third Section .....	tbd

List of References .....	tbd
List of Figures .....	tbd
List of Tables .....	tbd
List of Abbreviations .....	tbd
Annex .....	tbd
Declaration of Authorship .....	tbd

6 Contents

Provide an overview of what each section of the final thesis will contain.

Introduction: Here a general overview of the topic is given.

Second Section: Here....

7 Preliminary Roadmap

Provide a potential roadmap of the work to be carried out in the next months.

- From DD/MM/YYYY to DD/MM/YYYY:

- Objective 1
- Objective 2
- (tentative) Objective 3
- (tentative) Objective 4
- From DD/MM/YYYY to DD/MM/YYYY:
  - Objective 1
  - Objective 2
  - (tentative) Objective 3
  - (tentative) Objective 4
- Submission deadline:
  - Hand in the thesis

7.1 Length of the Expose

As a reminder, Exposes for Bachelor's theses are expected to have from 27k to 40k characters (spaces included, excluding references) in length; whereas Exposes for Master's theses are expected to be from 30k to 45k characters in length.

Both ranges are purely an indicator, and exceptions can be discussed with the supervisor.
